

Dear Mrs. Tannen,

I apologize for my rude behavior yesterday. The reason I had done this is because the entire day I had energy piling up. All of the classes before drama I knew I couldn't make jokes, it was boring. I thought in Drama I could just let my energy out, because everyone loves it. It's fun and wacky, and I decided to be, too. I was blind not to see that I went so far to actually disrupt the class. Now, I've found an obvious solution; I can use that energy right after school. I've disobeyed the rules of respect, hand raising, and silence. I am very sorry for doing this, and you have my word that the disruption will be put to an end. School is learning not laughing and I now follow that rule.

Sincerely,

Tin Cetic
